

SUSTO RETURNS WITH TIME IN THE SUN OCTOBER 29th VIA NEW WEST RECORDS

NORTH AMERICAN TOUR DATES ANNOUNCED

SUSTO will return with Time in the Sun on October 29th via New West Records. The 11-song set was produced and engineered by Wolfgang Zimmerman (Band of Horses) in the band's hometown of Charleston, South Carolina. Time in the Sun follows their critically acclaimed 2019 studio album Ever Since I Lost My Mind which Paste raved was "a resounding triumph." The joy of birth, the closure of death, the warmth of true friendship, and the future rotate on the axis of the band's New West Records debut. Frontman Justin Osborne distills this ebb and flow into songs underpinned by lyrical eloquence, unpredictable dynamics, and a thoroughly alive rock and roll spirit.

Prior to entering the studio, Osborne became a father and midway through recording, lost his own father to cancer. Osborne says, "Because I had begun writing when I found out I was going to be a dad, these events were the biggest inspirations for the record. It felt like I was in between the beginning and end of life. Up until my own father passed away, I felt like it was an album about new life and becoming a parent. His passing shifted the narrative towards the cyclical nature of life, death, and new births."

Since 2013, Justin Osborne has quietly prepared to make such a statement as Time in the Sun. He began penning songs as a teenager in South Carolina and after a hiatus from music, relocated to Havana, Cuba. While there, he befriended local musicians who encouraged him to focus on writing songs again. The band's name SUSTO is derived from a Latin American term that can be roughly translated as "panic attack." Osborne says, "That deep fright was something that I was experiencing, and songwriting felt like it was helping me cure it." SUSTO has become a live favorite through constant headline touring, support dates with The Lumineers, Band of Horses, The Head and the Heart, as well as festival appearances at Austin City Limits, Hangout Fest, Stagecoach, Hopscotch, Pickathon, AmericanaFest and more.

SUSTO have announced their initial tour dates in support of Time in the Sun. Launching August 13th in Greenville, SC, the trek features stops in Athens, GA at The Georgia Theater, the AmericanaFest in Nashville, TN, the Coast Is Clear Music & Arts Festival in Key West and more. Please see all dates below.
